Jose suffered a debilitating stroke that limited his ability to do everyday normal activities. Growing frustrated and easily irritable, he gradually secluded himself from others.

During an outreach event, Project Access connected with Jose and shared that a community garden was in the works. This immediately sparked an interest in Jose who has had 40 years of experience in field work. He excitedly volunteered to be part of this project.

After getting involved, Jose’s attitude completely transformed. He is now seen as a pillar in the community and is leading efforts with the garden. Jose is grateful to have his passion reignited while encouraging him to stay active and help others.
