Michelle is a young college student who lives with her mom and brother. She juggled between two jobs just to keep up with the bills. Tired of living from paycheck to paycheck, she came to Project Access for support. Michelle expressed her interest in teaching so the staff worked with her to finesse her resume and sharpen her interviewing skills.

Weeks later, Michelle landed a job with the city of San Bernardino working to support an after school program. She was able to quit her job in fast food and focus on a job that aligns with her long term career goals. Michelle is happy she took this step to achieve her dream of becoming a teacher.

Michelle is now employed with CAPS which provides exemplary before and after school experiences for youth.
